

World's Lightest Wood.
The balsa tree, which is now being cultivated in Costa Rica, produces the lightest-known wood in the world. It is in great demand for all purposes where lightness of construction is of importance, it is very porous and a good insulator and is much used in airplane building, as it offers the minimum amount of air resistance.

Edible Alarm Clock.
It was late in the afternoon when the Scotch minister arrived at the farmhouse. The housewife suggested that perhaps he would like a cup of tea before he began the "exercises." "Na, na," said he, "I aye tak my tea better when my work is done. You can put the pan on and leave the door ajar, an' I'll draw to a close in the prayer when I hear the haam fizzin'."

Danish investors have perfected motors that are claimed to work well with peat gas as fuel instead of benzine or gasoline.

ROOSEVELT CABIN AS NATION'S SHRINE

Old Home in North Dakota Is to Be Preserved.

Bismarck, N. D.—The Roosevelt cabin, once occupied by Theodore Roosevelt when recuperating at the old Maltese ranch, seven miles south of the village of Medora in the Little Missouri Bad Lands of North Dakota, is to be preserved in a fitting shrine, according to the State Historical society of North Dakota.

Lewis F. Crawford, curator of the society, is preparing plans for a stone shrine of stately and substantial design to be erected over the building. Assistance through popular subscription from every state is being considered, Mr. Crawford states, owing to requests from all sections for the shrine's establishment.

The cabin has historical interest in North Dakota and the Northwest. No other building in the state has traveled as much. It was taken from the Maltese ranch, where it had stood for more than twenty years, and shipped to the St. Louis exposition in 1904. At the close of the exposition, the cabin was returned here and set up on the capitol grounds.

The building is constructed of pine logs, cut on the upper waters of the Little Missouri in 1880-81.

Stone-Age Tools Used by Russian Peasants

Riga.—There are people in Russia today living in a "stone age" all their own, according to reports of Prof. Leon Tann, a Russian ethnologist, which have been received here by Latvian authorities.

Professor Tann recently completed a tour of the wilds of Russia, and it was in the Jaroslav district that he found the peasantry utilized stone for implements of numerous kinds for every-day usage where ordinarily metal is now used.

Lack of iron and steel was attributed as the reason for this backward step, but Professor Tann was of the opinion that this stone work of today was far superior to the stone implements turned out by man thousands of years ago. The hatchets and axes of stone made by the Jaroslav natives were particularly well done and serviceable.

In the district of Orlov Professor Tann found several communities where the natives virtually live without clothing of any kind all summer, and in winter hibernate within their huts and dens, and exist on potatoes, dried fish and dried watermelon rinds.

Synthetic Gold Forms Color in German Songs

Berlin.—Gold, not silver, nor love, nor the moon, is the popular song topic here just now since Prof. Adolph Miethe announced the secret of creating synthetic gold by dissolving an atom of quicksilver. "Golden Dreams," "The Hunger for Gold," "Golden Gallops," and various other songs having reference to the precious metal are heard on the radio, in the cabarets and everywhere since the scientist made the subject popular.

Find Ancient Armadillo Near Buenos Aires

Buenos Aires.—Laborers doing excavating work in the suburb of Vicente Lopez, just outside the city limits of Buenos Aires, have discovered a rich deposit of fossil remains of the beasts who used to inhabit this part of South America in prehistoric ages. The head of a glyptodon, the predecessor of the armadillo, together with dorsal and thigh bones, were among the finds, which included also bones of a prehistoric tiger.

The glyptodon skull is not of the giant species, but the paleontologists of the National Museum of Natural History, who are conducting the excavating work, consider it as one of the finest examples yet discovered, including nearly all the teeth.

HARTMAN THEATER

Douglas Fairbanks in the most amazing and spectacular screen production yet known to the world, "The Thief of Bagdad" comes to the Hartman theater, Columbus next Sunday night, September 28. So much has been written of the astonishing occurrences depicted in this picture that perhaps not enough has been written about the charmingly romantic love story of the Thief and the Princess. It is said that the famous Doug has never made love more aptly than in the scenes with the Princess, having first climbed up the magic rope to reach the harem and, chastened by love, reveals to her the fact that he is in reality an imposter. Julianne Johnston, who plays the princess, is one of the most beautiful leading women Mr. Fairbanks has ever played opposite in his long career as a screen star. She brings to the role added grace and charm, gained thru her experience as one of the famous Morgan dancers. Some of the outstanding features are the magic carpet on which the thief and the princess soar over the rooftops into the sky; the winged horse, mounted on which the thief dashes in to and thru the clouds; the miraculous seed which, when thrown on the ground, create a huge army from nothingness, the forest of enchanted trees and the cloak of invisibility, which the thief uses to cover himself and the princess so that they may escape the soldiers of the Mongol prince; and yet aside from all these wonders, which no one would heretofore have thought possible on the screen, there will be found the living dragon in the Marvelous Valley of Monsters, the Crystal Realm beneath the sea, the Flight of the Thousand Stairs and the astonishing Cavern of Fire. This picture will positively not be shown anywhere else in Columbus this year. When presented here, there will be offered all the atmospheric effects which marked the New York presentation at the Liberty theater, which will include a symphony orchestra, full scenic and stage effects, a band of Arabian musicians and a Mohammedan Prayer Man. Mail orders given prompt attention. Matinee daily.

Beautiful Dream Faded.

Helen was told she would have to wait until her birthday for a new doll. She tried to be patient, but a month seemed a long time to wait. One morning she awoke quite early, sobbing loudly. Her mother asked what was wrong. "Me dreamed me had a doll, but I woke up and found my dream gone," cried Helen.

Youthful Dinner Frock of Shell Pink Chiffon

Wise Shopper Invests in Sensible Materials

There is nothing so unpleasant in dress as shabby finery and those of us who are obliged to keep up the self-complacency of a slim purse must buy so carefully and with such close attention to values that we are not compelled to cling to our "finery" a long time after it has ceased to be "fine."

We are all familiar with the appearance of the woman who tries to economize by wearing out an elaborate afternoon blouse with her plain tailored suit. Many women relegate an afternoon party gown to morning use simply because it is too soiled and worn out to do duty any longer for dressy occasions. Similarly white kid gloves are worn to "wear them out"—long after their whiteness has gone the way of the irrevocable past.

The housewife is not the only one who is guilty of unsuitably using her "shabby finery." A business woman, now and then, violates the canons of good taste by appearing at work in clothes, which, considered a bit passe for the dinner hour, have been relegated, perhaps with a minor change or two to the office.

"Dressing up" a costume is an error in a slightly different direction. Many a woman has tried to "dress up" a perfectly plain costume with bits of finery, using perhaps a "fancy" blouse of coarse lace or open-work embroidery, with a severe tailor-made suit, and succeeded only in throwing the costume out of key and cheapening the whole effect.

The important point for the shopper is to purchase sensible colors and materials in the first place. Rich delicate fabrics and delicate colors, however desirable they may appear in the store, are not suitable for hard wear, or appropriate for many purposes, or for many hours of the day. For the woman who can have only one suit, a beautiful serge will always be a "better buy" than the corduroy or velvet, no matter how fashionable or desirable the one may seem at the time of purchase. Simple clothes of good lines and quality materials are the only ones of which women can truthfully say that they "wore" as long "as there was a rag left" of them.—Kansas City Star.

New Ideas From Abroad in Jewelry for Fall

Jewelry will continue to play in the fall season an important part as a smart dress accessory. A buyer from a large New York store who returned a few weeks ago from a visit to England and the continent is displaying some pieces of jewelry she purchased when abroad.

One of the sets which is unusual and rare is of red onyx. The necklace is set with crystal roundels separated by knots of cord in the same soft red shade. The bracelet to match is in one piece, which is interesting, as onyx seldom comes in pieces from which large articles of jewelry can be fashioned.

Another lovely importation are chains of powder-blue chalcedony which come in the flat, the round and the torpedo-shaped bead. It is also to be obtained in a deep purple. Tortoise shell, it is said, will be another smart note in jewelry this fall. Strands of beads in brown and amber are featured, together with one-piece bracelets to match and cigarette cases.

Printed Chiffon Gowns

The college girl will find a printed chiffon gown a boon to her wardrobe. This season it is better than ever from a fashion standpoint, and never were the colorings and designs so varied and beautiful or so inexpensive. For afternoon or for more formal evening wear a gown of this material is not only versatile and correct, but also surprisingly practical, as it will stand an endless number of cleanings, and emerge each time fresh and unfaded.

U. S. ARMY HAS ITS "LADIES FROM HELL"

Samoan Soldiers Wear Kilts and Nothing Else.

Washington, D. C.—Uncle Sam has soldiers who go Scotland's "Ladies From Hell" one better. They wear kilts—and that's all.

They are natives of Samoa in the South Pacific, where the banishment of a chief by the American governor of the islands has caused a protest to be made directly to President Coolidge.

In regard to these picturesque soldiers, a bulletin from the Washington, D. C., headquarters of the National Geographic society quotes a communication from Lorena MacIntyre Quinn as follows:

"It would be hard to find a more picturesque body of men than these, our South sea island soldiers. Tall, broad-shouldered, handsome in features, possessing splendid poise, they are admirable types of their race.

"Their fatigue uniform consists of a sort of black kilt with a bright red stripe around the border. Above the waist and below the knee the uniform is 'nature's own.'

"A leather belt carrying a dagger on the side holds the kilt or lava-lava in place. A bright red turban is the head-dress.

"For dress uniform the Fita-Fitas wear with the lava-lava a sleeveless white undershirt, similar to the X. Y. Z. or A. B. C. garment graphically described in the advertising columns.

Uniforms Made Them Ill.

"When the native soldiers were first taken into the service of the United States, a less abbreviated and more conventional uniform was provided them, with the result that they were constantly suffering from colds; so there was a wise reversion to a uniform on the lines of their native dress.

"The Fita-Fitas have municipal as well as military duties. They act as policemen in and about Pago Pago, guard all prisoners in the Pago Pago jail, and frequently are called upon to settle fights at cricket games between rival native villages. The last-named duty is sometimes a severe test for the soldier as an arbitrator, especially when his own village is involved in the controversy.

"The multifarious activities of our South sea soldiers seem rather at variance with the conceptions most of us have about native life in the islands of the South Pacific. We picture a native as loling under a coconut tree, an obliging wife sitting close by, waving a palm leaf to 'shoo' away the flies from her lord, and food on the branches of nearby trees within easy reach of both.

"When the governor of American Samoa makes a tour of inspection of Tutuila, he is always accompanied by native soldiers. The Fita-Fita selected to be the orderly on such occasions holds a proud position among his friends.

"The official party is received with great dignity and formality by the chiefs of the villages on these tours, as the Samoans delight in ceremony and speechmaking. The reception accorded the Fita-Fitas by the pretty, vivacious Samoan belles of the different villages is always exceedingly cordial. These maidens with bronze complexions, are as susceptible to the fascinations of the lava-lava uniform as their sisters in America are partial to khaki and brass buttons.

"The principal feature of the Fita-Fita organization is the band. A little more than a decade ago the natives of American Samoa had never seen a brass instrument, but with infinite patience a bandmaster of the United States Navy eventually taught some of the Fita-Fitas how to play, with the result that today the repertoire of the Fita-Fita band covers a wide range of classical and popular airs.

Rooters at Cricket Games.

"The favorite form of recreation for the Fita-Fitas is cricket. The English missionaries taught the Samoans the game, and cricket tournaments are gala events in the islands. Instead of having the regulation eleven on each side, however, the natives have as many as forty of fifty, so that a game very often assumes the proportions of a miniature battle.

"The 'rooting' section is the prime attraction at the tournament. The antics and capers of the Samoan 'bleacherites' at their games would make the 'stunts' of the undergraduates at an inter-collegiate game seem tame in comparison. The natives crouch on the side lines, beating wooden drums and giving vent to wild chants, easily eclipsing our own college cheers, as far as volume of noise is concerned.

"Courage of a high degree is characteristic of the Samoans. The world looked on with admiration in 1889 when the natives defied the warships of three nations—three American ships, one British, and three German. Then, when a hurricane swept the harbor of Apia on March 16, 1889, and destroyed all the assembled warships with the exception of the British Calliope, these 'savages' swam out and rescued their enemies."

Owens Smallest Book

Elberfeld, Germany.—An opera singer of this city possesses what is said to be the smallest book in the world. Its dimensions are one-quarter of an inch by one-half inch. It contains German poetry and is entitled "Almanac on the year 1837."

Eyes Had to Be Blue.

Blue-eyed babies always claim a preponderance of admirers. The fact has just again been emphasized—this time at Hampstead, England. It was announced in the press that the town officials had a "bonny blue-eyed baby" for adoption, and straightway 350 would-be adopters wrote to secure it. Unfortunately it was found that the infant's eyes had been wrongly described. The eyes were not blue, after all, and when they heard of this some of the ladies withdrew their offers.

"A Little Learning."

The following are some of the answers recently given in a school examination on "general knowledge." "Gravitation is when an apple falls on the floor." "Benjamin Franklin invented lightning." "The place where they keep all kinds of wild animals is called a theological garden." "One of the most important inventions of modern times is the North Pole."

Good Stain Mixture.

Take an ounce of sal-ammoniac and salt of tartar, mix and pour over them a pint of soft water. Dip into it those parts of a white article stained with wine, fruit or mildew. After the stains have thus been removed, wash in the usual manner.

Just Missed Perfection.

When Mrs. Langtry was at the summit of her beauty and fame she met at a dinner an African king who was visiting London. She did her best to please the dusky monarch and evidently succeeded, for he said to her as they parted: "Ah, madam, if heaven had only made you black and fat you would be irresistible."

With the Washington C. Football rivalry between Circleville and Washington has always been intense but on the lines of good sportsmanship, and some mighty clashes have occurred between teams representing the two communities and the game tomorrow should prove no exception to this rule.

A return game will be played at Washington by the Eagle team, probably October 12th or 19th, the date to be decided tomorrow.

As the game tomorrow is played on a percentage basis, the Eagles are unable to invite the ladies to attend without charge, but the admission will be but 25 cents to the fair rooters and a large number are expected.

Sticks as Receipts.

In one of the corridors of the British houses of parliament there is a curious exhibit which looks like a bundle of kindling wood. It represents all that is left of the account "books" used by the exchequer during the Middle Ages. The bundle consists of "tallies," notched sticks on which accounts were kept. When an account was paid a stick was split. One-half was kept and the other half was given as a "receipt." When the crude system was abandoned, and proper books were kept, there was a vast accumulation of these tallies, and early in the last century an official had the happy thought of saving on fuel by using this vast hoard of tally-sticks as kindling wood. It was actually by the overheating of a stove by using too many of these tally-sticks that the old houses of parliament caught fire in 1834 and were burned down.

Uncle Sam's Islands.

The island of Tutuila and other small Samoan islands came into the possession of the United States in January, 1900. This island has an area of about fifty-four square miles, with a population of 3,800. Mauna and the other islands have a united area of about twenty-five square miles, with about 2,000 inhabitants. Pago Pago is the only good harbor.

BANKS OF GERMANY SWINDLE YANKEES

Warsaw, Ind.—Hoostlers who speculated in German marks four and five years ago at 3 and 4 cents a mark, and who later speculated further in the hope of covering up their losses when the mark continued to drop in value, have given up all hope of ever retrieving even a small portion of their losses as a result of letters now being received from German banks, where the speculators have their marks on deposit.

Several months ago, the depositors were notified no interest would be paid on deposits of a less value than $25 in American money at the time the letter was written. Many of the speculators who had converted hundreds of American dollars into marks at the time found the depreciation of the mark had decreased the value of their deposits to only a few dollars of United States money, and so brought them within this "no interest" rule.

Semi-annual statements being sent to American speculators in marks are being charged against the speculator's account at the rate of 1,250,000,000, 000 marks per letter.

The speculator who, a little more than a year ago, bought marks at the rate of 2,000,000 for $1, has long since been wiped out, so far as his deposits in the German banks are concerned. His credit balance has been wiped off the books of the banks.

A Warsaw man who, five years ago, bought marks at 4 cents each, depositing $300 worth of them in a Berlin bank on the advice of a foreign exchange broker, a year ago "averaged down" his holdings by buying more marks at a few million for a dollar. Then came the climax and the mark dropped in valuation to more than four trillion to a dollar. The Warsaw man's account in the Berlin bank, representing a deposit of around $500 in American money, dwindled to a valuation of around .88 in United States cash. As all semi-annual statements sent out by Berlin banks are charged against the accounts of depositors and at the rate of a trillion and a quarter for each letter, the Warsaw man's deposit soon will entirely disappear.

The Berlin banks, unlike Austrian banks, decline to furnish American depositors with deposit books, which would eliminate the confiscatory procedure brought about by the rendering of semi-annual statements.

His Own Death Notice Made Foe His Friend

London.—Sir Charles Phillips, distinguished art critic who died recently, had the unusual experience once of reading the proof sheet of his own obituary notice, thereby finding that the writer, who had been a life-long enemy, could be fair in death.

On the staff of the newspaper for which Sir Charles wrote art criticisms was another critic whose work invariably clashed with Phillips'. So antagonistic were their views they ceased to be on speaking terms. The day came when Sir Charles was seriously ill, and, to be prepared for eventualities, his obituary was written, and by his old-time antagonist.

This notice, by reason of its slug line, "Phillips," and through one of the best regulated newspapers, was mistaken for one of Sir Charles' own contributions and forwarded to his home for correction.

When convalescent he was allowed to see the correspondence which had piled up and among it was the proof sheet. Sir Charles found his enemy not only had been eulogistic but particularly sympathetic and discerning. For years afterward this writer of the notice and its subject were fast friends.

Gold Strike in British Columbia Starts Stampede

Wrangell, Alaska.—Reports of a gold strike near Dease lake, in the Cassiar district, British Columbia, have caused a stampede from Telegraph Creek, British Columbia, according to word received here from Capt. Eld Barrington. Captain Barrington and his crew, operating a passenger boat on the Stikine river, left their vessel and departed for the field.

Race of Wild Men Reported in Bengal

Calcutta.—Further stories of the supposed existence of primitive beings living in rocks and caves and preying on animal life comes from near Pharijong, in northern Bengal.

These beings are supposed to be men, their bodies covered with hair, and long-matted locks hanging over their shoulders. They are termed by the Tibetans as "abominable snow men," and the Tibetans believe they are devils, and stand in great awe of them.

Several natives say they have seen the animal men eating raw yak, which they had caught and killed. The men are described by the natives as about six feet tall, the body being covered with black hair like a bear, with a red face like a species of Indian monkey. They walk erect like a man.

MAIL SERVICE

The United States postoffice is, probably, the greatest business institution in this busy world and has grown until now the postal receipts reach the enormous sum of $572,000,000 annually.

Mail in Alaska.

An airplane service was established and run as an experiment in Alaska recently covering a route from Fairbanks to McGrath, which ordinarily takes the dog sleds 35 days in each direction. Larger cargoes of mail were carried than possible to accommodate in the dog sleds and the round trip was made in one day, going out in the morning and back in the evening. Two and a half to three hours being required for each journey of the plane.

The outcome of this experiment will undoubtedly be the rather universal application of the airplane to the postal service in Alaska for delivering mails are difficult. The postal department has sixty-eight dog routes which are run in relays and which together employ 3,000 dogs.

Air Mail.

The United States has the longest air line in the world and is the only route upon which night as well as day flying is employed in the delivering of mail. The route is between New York and San Francisco, and it takes 34 hours and 45 minutes going west and 31 hours and 35 minutes coming east and the rate is eight cents for one ounce for each of the three zones. The new air mail stamps are in denominations of 8c, 16c and 24 cents.

MYSTERY UNSOLVED

Tunnels Found Under Washington Cause Speculation.

Washington, Sept. 27.—The mystery surrounding the series of tunnels discovered beneath several blocks of Washington's exclusive residential section remains unsolved. The tunnels blocked off led to places where iron ladders and massive stone arches indicated a second and lower level, where the subterranean apartments were suspected by the original investigators. Exploration of these "leads" has been deferred to await better tools. Evidence that the tunnels may more recently have been used by bootleggers is believed by some to be increasing. This is based on the quantity of bottles found around the walling up of the approaches to the lower level. Some credit German spies with building the work, others connect it with Civil war days, while still others describe it as the rendezvous of unscrupulous plotters.

FINAL TEST MADE

Big Zeppelin Airship Soon to Sail For the United States.

Berlin, Sept. 27.—The ZR-3, the finest airship yet built, was given its final endurance test here. Many shops were closed while the proprietors joined the throngs to witness the flight. The Zeppelin, which will be flown to America and delivered up as one of the spoils of war next month, hovered all night over the Baltic regions. It crossed and re-crossed over Copenhagen and its barely audible propellers and twinkling cabin lights were heard and seen in Helsingborg, Sweden. President Ebert radiocast a speech of welcome to the giant visitor, expressing a wish that the Zeppelin will "cruise over seas to demonstrate Germany's undiminished courage."

AMUSEMENTS

This picture following "as it does" "Zaza" and "The Humming Bird" is a direct contrast to the two in the matter of clothes. Miss Swanson wears fourteen different gowns in this production, while in "The Humming Bird" she has but four outfits, one of them being boy's clothes.

She is resplendent in dinner frocks, dazzling evening gowns and snappy sport togs in her role of an ultra-fashionable young society woman, and she hasn't forgotten her acting of "Zaza" and "The Humming Bird" either.

And that's not all—with each of the stunning gowns Miss Swanson has a special coiffeur that will make the women-folk green with envy.

It's a story of New York high society life—that side so carefully concealed from the public life—an expose of the private life of the Four Hundred.

You've never really seen Gloria Swanson until you've seen her in "A Society Scandal."

Rod La Rocque and Ricardo Cortez play opposite the star and Allan Simpson is also proficiently cast as Gloria's pampered husband in the picture, which will be the feature at the Met theater on Monday.

DENIES THAT SNAKES CAN SWALLOW YOUNG

Writer Puts This With Other Reptilian Myths.

Snake stories, appropriate to the season, are beginning to crop out in the country papers, says Nomad in the Boston Transcript. Snakes about Boston itself, by the way, were never so scarce as they are now. Districts in and about the Middlesex falls, which once abounded in black snakes, are practically destitute of them now, for the simple reason that their food supply has disappeared with the general clearing away of underbrush and the reduction of the number of moles, field mice and various descriptions of insects. In the course of a whole summer's walk Nomad has not seen more than four or five snakes, and these were all garter snakes. The black snake is one of the noblest as well as the most harmless of reptiles, and its disappearance from the woods near Boston is greatly to be regretted. But apropos of snakes, Nomad notes that in the Portland Express a controversy is raging as to whether or not mother snakes swallow their young for the purpose of protection. Now, so far as Nomad knows, no snake swallows his young, and under no circumstances could the young be restored alive to the world even if they were swallowed, but here is a gentleman signing his initials and evidently vouched for by the Portland paper as a trustworthy person, who tells the story.

"I cannot deny the testimony furnished by my own eyes when I witnessed such an occurrence in southern Indiana several years ago.

"In company with several young men I had gone to a pond on a tobacco farm in search of frogs and on our approach noticed a large blue water snake on the bank surrounded by many little ones. The little snakes disappeared almost instantly, apparently running down the mouth of the parent snake. A few minutes later the snake was killed and the body mutilated, revealing the young ones alive within it. This was marvelous in my sight, but the young men with me assured me there was nothing unusual about it.

"A friend of mine, whose veracity is unquestioned, tells me he had a similar experience with a copperhead snake in the West Virginia hills. It may be true that digestive fluids in the snake's stomach would kill the young if the parent were unable to control the flow in the digestive tract. On the other hand, there may exist a sac within the body of the female snake provided for just such a purpose. I do not know. Perhaps there are those who can say."

Nomad has heard many marvelous stories about snakes which their tellers firmly believed, but which could not have been true—stories, for instance, of rattlesnakes leaping through the air to strike their prey, and even of the "hoop snake" that takes his tail in his mouth, turning himself into a hoop, and rolls rapidly along in pursuit of human beings. These tales are figments of the imagination—and no creature seems to stimulate the imagination as the snake does. It is probable that the delusion of snakes swallowing their young arose from the fact that a good many snakes, including our common black snakes, devour smaller snakes, while rattlesnakes and all the garter snakes, being viviparous, and not egg laying, contain their young before they are born.

Seemed Improbable

After several vain attempts to follow the light conversation of the young person he had taken in at dinner, Professor Parker struck out for his natural level, and explained to her carefully and elaborately that a recent discovery showed that life can be produced in sterilized bouillon by the action of radium.

"A very wonderful discovery," he continued. "And what trains of thought it gives rise to! Why, this may have happened in this world of ours millions of years ago!"

"Really!" she said, visibly impressed, but a little incredulous. "Of course I understand that there may have been radium then, but where did they get the beef tea?"—Exchange.

No Water, No Electricity

There is an excellent reason why electric service companies build their steam-driven generating stations on the shore of a river, lake, bay or harbor. For every pound of coal burned in the furnaces of such stations nearly a half a ton of water is needed to condense the steam produced, after it has passed through the turbine which turns the electric dynamo. At one such steam-operated electric generating station in the South all of the water of a sizable river is diverted from the river bed and passes over the condensing pipes of the plant's boilers.

Yes, Dear

A little boy about seven of whom she was especially fond was there. "Would you like to come and live with me in my bungalow?" she asked suddenly.

The little fellow beamed and then he looked at her escort. "If I do," he asked, "will you get me a papa without any gray hair?"—Los Angeles Times.

Don't Tease Child.
Teasing has ruined the disposition of many a child. The parents are not likely to be guilty of such conduct, but other children in the family, or some other relative, may make the child's life utterly miserable by constant teasing. A thoughtless adult, intending to be playful, will keep a child struggling for some object, almost allowing him to get it over and over again, only to thwart the child's purpose, and so causing a wearing irritation.

Bull Convicted at Unique Trial

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Although the live stock of the community was of such good quality that it was difficult to find a worthy "prisoner," the mock trial of a scrub bull recently staged at Waynesboro, Pa., drew an audience of more than a thousand persons. The advertising club of the chamber of commerce, the Franklin County Farm bureau, and the county agent had charge of arrangements. The trial was conducted according to an outline furnished by the United States Department of Agriculture.

Proceedings Realistic.

Local legal talent made the court proceedings realistic. The sheriff and his force of deputies "arrested" the bull and otherwise aided in conducting court order.

For the convenience of busy farmers the trial was held at 7 o'clock in the evening. The merchants of Waynesboro held a "dollar day," which was widely advertised, with the scrub-bull trial as an auxiliary attraction. Twenty-five hundred card invitations were mailed and 500 colored posters advertised the event.

The trial took place on an electric-lighted platform erected in the ball park. Band music added to the entertainment and the services of the boy scouts were enlisted to handle the traffic. A dairy-cattle specialist from the department of agriculture acted as expert witness for the prosecution.

Court of Bovine Justice.

A jury of 12 men rendered a verdict of guilty after hearing the evidence laid before the court of bovine justice. The prosecution showed the detrimental effect which scrub bulls have on the dairy industry. It then described the prosperity and other benefits brought by pure bred bulls and pleaded forcefully for conviction.

The defense consisted largely of oratory aided by music and poetry as vain resorts to save the prisoner from doom. One witness for the defense failed to impress the jury when he testified that the scrub bull was a great labor-saving device. His daughters giving less milk required fewer pails and cans and were more quickly milked.

Cutting Soy Beans for Hay With Common Mower

Soy beans for hay may be cut any time after the pods are formed and before many of the leaves begin to fall. Too early cutting lowers the yield and late cutting reduces the quality of the hay. They may be cut with an ordinary mower, allowed to wilt for a day in the swath, and the curing completed in the windrows, advises H. R. Sumner, agronomy specialist, Kansas State Agricultural college.

Harvesting the seed crop should start when half or three-fourths of the leaves have fallen and most of the pods have changed color. This rule will vary somewhat with the season, variety and harvester used. If the crop is allowed to get over-ripe much loss will result from shattering, he says.

The beans may be harvested with either a grain or corn binder or a mower with side delivery attachment. Care in handling is necessary to prevent shattering. The crop should be shocked, capped, and allowed to stand for at least two weeks before threshing. Stacking soy beans is a good practice, says the agronomist.

Insure New Seeding of Alfalfa by Using Care

The first winter is the testing time for a new seeding of alfalfa. Whether the stand comes through successfully depends largely on how well it was established in the fall. The greater the growth, the less likely will the stand suffer from winter-killing.

The experiences of many farmers have demonstrated that acid phosphate of a high-analysis fertilizer application at seeding time is good insurance for the new seeding. Alfalfa is very responsive to phosphorus fertilizers. Most soils are deficient in phosphorus. Fertilizer enables the young alfalfa plants to obtain an early vigorous growth. Fertilizer, however, does not make up for poor seed, lack of preparation of the seed bed, or lack of time. Liming is often necessary for best results with fertilizer. Wherever liming is needed, phosphorus is quite likely to be needed also.

The application of 200 to 400 pounds of fertilizer per acre before seeding thoroughly mixed in with the soil, is one of the best investments that can be made to insure success with alfalfa.

Conserve Soil Moisture by Keeping Down Weeds

One of the principal steps in conserving soil moisture in the garden is keeping down all weed growth. This may be done either by cultivation or by mulching. If a mulching system is used, from three to six inches of straw or hay is spread on the surface of the ground. In addition to preventing weak growth, a mulch of this kind serves to prevent evaporation from the surface soil and so conserves the maximum of water. The soil under such a mulch in the college orchard was found to be well supplied with moisture after a month of drought in the summer of 1922.

Many Birds Named From Their Songs

Some birds, as the whippoorwill, the phoebe and the bobolink get their names from their songs, which are supposed to resemble the words, says the Kansas City Star.

The name of the grackle comes from its cry, "Gra, gra," by way of a Latin word. Pigeon comes from the Latin pipire, to peep or chirp.

Robin is supposed to be an abbreviation of Robert, which name is from the old High German language and means "bright in fame."

Petrel is a diminutive of Peter. The petrel skims the surface of lakes and the sea, near which it makes its home. The name is believed to have reference to St. Peter's walking on the water. The stormy petrel, supposed to foretell storms, is the bird known as "Mother Carey's chicken."

The missel-bird, largest of the European thrush family, is so named on account of its partiality for a diet of mistletoe berry. The word comes from the German, mistel, meaning mistletoe. The missel-bird sings loudest just before a storm and is sometimes called the storm cock.

Oriole comes by way of the French from the Latin aureolus, diminutive of autumn, gold, so called because of its bright plumage.

Finch is an old Anglo-Saxon word and means brisk, smart or gay, words which well describe the birds which bear that cognomen. The grosbeaks, which are allied to the finches, are so called because their bills are gross, that is, thick.

The kingfisher is a king among fishing birds, and so is called after the masterly way in which it obtains its prey.

Sulphur comes from the German and means a bill, or beak, in reference to the long bill of the bird.

Dove is from the Anglo-Saxon and means to dive. Duck comes from the fowl's habit of ducking under water. The gadwall duck gets about easily; it "gads" well.

The pheasant derives its name from the Phasis, a river in Asia Minor. The guinea fowl of the farmyard get their name from Guinea, in Africa, whence they originally came. Turkeys, natives of America, were erroneously supposed to have come from Turkey, and were so called.

Proof Positive

"They tell us that Hollywood is a humdrum, slow burg," he said, "but the proof that the opposite is the case keeps cropping up all the time."

"Strong proof it is, too. It's like the story they tell in Bermuda."

"What proof have you that Jones is married?" a Hamilton man asked.

"Well," said another Hamilton man, "I saw him pushing a baby coach on Sunday morning, and there was a young woman on one side of him and an old woman on the other, and as I passed the young woman said, 'You've been like that eight times this month, you cur!' and then the old dame chipped in with, 'Do, for goodness' sake, Maggie, make him put another thousand on his life before his liver's gone completely.'"—Detroit Free Press.

Wisdom of Towser

"You can't overestimate the intelligence of a dog," declared Col. Spotswood Telfair, gazing at his favorite hound engaged in snapping feebly at the flies.

"When Towser was in his prime he had an uncanny way of knowing in advance the sort of game I was going to hunt. For instance, if I left the house carrying a rifle, Towser would dash for the woods and trail nothing but squirrels. If I started out with a shotgun, Towser would trail nothing but rabbits."

"One day I decided to puzzle the old rascal, so I took down my fishing pole and started to the river. It may sound preposterous, gentlemen, but when I got to the edge of the yard I found the durned dog scratching up fishing worms for me!"—Judge.

Unexplored Land

One of the largest unexplored areas in the United States lies in a triangular space between the Colorado and the San Juan rivers in southwestern Utah. An expedition of the National Geographic society has begun a survey of the region, primarily to determine whether it was once generally inhabited by the ancient cliff dwellers. The country consists mostly of canyons and sandstone cliffs and is of fantastic beauty. An area there as large as some of the smaller Eastern states still remains quite unknown to white men.—Youth's Companion.

Mark Twain's Gown

On the occasion at Oxford when Mark Twain, the humorist, was given an honorary degree, he remarked to the maharajah of Bikanir, another recipient: "I like the degree well enough, but I'm crazy about the clothes." (He wore the usual Oxford gown with its brilliant hood.) "I wish I could wear 'em all day and all night. Think of the gloomy garb I have to walk the streets in at home, when my soul cries out for gold braid, yellow and scarlet sashes, jewels and turbans! If there's a dearth of maharajahs at any time in India, just cable me, sir, and I'll take the next train."

Menus That Pass in the Night

By FANNIE KILBOURNE

(© by Doubleday, Page & Co.)

IT WAS fortunate that they found the row of figures before even the soup. If they had chanced upon it along toward the coffee they could have paused for only a hurried glance and then been lusted into the great outdoors. Leisure is not served in the Rose Garden restaurant on Broadway.

The atmosphere does not encourage even fairly brazen romance and Jim's and Nancy's was a newly kindled, shy little flame that might blaze up gorgeously or puff out altogether according to which zephyr of chance blew first.

R—40.
F—65.
C—35.

She read the first items aloud. "Some thrifty souls have been adding up their dinner check," said Jim, finding all the savory that the Rose Garden's special dinner lacked in just sharing it with Nancy. "Let's figure out what they had. 'R,' that must be roast." He consulted the a la carte side of the menu. Sure enough; prime ribs a Piedro were forty cents.

"The girl had fish," Nancy took it up gayly. Taking up everything in life with quick, gay sympathy was Nancy's way. "Mercy, the extravagant creature must have had fillet of sole; that's the only fish that's sixty-five cents. But what can 'I-S' or an 'S' be? There's nothing on the menu for eight cents."

They studied the menu for a few puzzled moments, then Jim grinned, enlightened.

"It's a budget!" he exclaimed. "These aren't foods at all. Look! 'R—40,' that's rent, forty dollars. And 'F—65,' I'll bet that's food."

"Of course it is!" delighted. "And 'C' is clothing. Put what on earth is 'I-S'?"

"Insurance!" said Jim promptly. "Eight a month's a hundred a year. That's about what five thousand straight life would cost a young fellow. I—I just happened to look it up the other day."

"And 'G & I' is gas and ice," Nancy guessed triumphantly. An incredulous pucker appeared between Jim's eyes.

"That guy isn't allowing enough for rent, is he? He can't get a place fit to take a nice girl to for forty dollars, can he?"

"Of course he can," said Nancy. "My cousin has a two-room flat out near High Bridge that they pay thirty-five for and it's cute. If this girl has any ideas about fixing up a place, forty's plenty."

"It is?" Jim's astonishment was tinged with sudden brightness. "'A' must be amusement," he went on. "Gosh, that fellow's got a nerve. Think of expecting a pretty girl who's been used to good times and attention and everything, to settle down to eight dollars a month for amusement for two."

"Why, I don't think that's nifty at all. Two people could have an awful lot of fun on eight dollars a month. They could go to one good show—that would be four-sixty, balcony seats and car fare—and to a 'movie' or two. And then just think of the fun you can have without spending hardly anything! Skating on Van Cortlandt park in the winter and going on picnics in the summer, building a fire and cooking outdoors. And having another couple in for dinner and to play cards afterward—that doesn't cost much."

"That's so," Jim agreed. "Those things are a circus. And if you like a person a lot, it's fun just to stay home sometimes, read out loud or play cribbage."

"Cribbage is a good game," said Nancy. "Dad and I used to play a game after dinner every night when I was a youngster."

Jim looked across the table at her, so gay and pretty and dear. A game of cribbage after dinner every night with Nancy! He looked down at the figures, the chart by which some game little vessel was going to chance the seas. Of course the budget chart may have been drawn by a storm-tossed old couple, by a lone woman or a father and son, but Jim would never believe it.

"Thirty-five dollars a month for clothes," he read. "They can't make it for that, can they? If the girl likes the kind of clothes you wear, for instance?"

Oh, surely it was a young couple who had drawn up the chart! The very breath of romance can be in a budget.

The special dinner progressed from tasteless soup to tasteless coffee. The hungry buzzards in the aisle drew nearer as dessert approached. But Jim and Nancy neither tasted, saw nor heard the cheapness. For the second time that night, romance was falling over the twosome table like a snowstorm over prosy and familiar sights, changing rent and food and insurance into glittering, mysterious charm.

Under the eye of the disapproving waiter, Jim slipped the soiled menu into his pocket, sent a wordless wish after the fellow martiners who had had it last. Wherever, whenever, however, they were setting sail, might their game little craft find good speed and fair weather!

KEEPING WELL

SLEEP

DR. FREDERICK R. GREEN
Editor of "HEALTH"

PROBABLY the average individual doesn't realize what an important part sleep and rest play in his physical and mental well-being and efficiency.

There is occasionally a person who apparently gets along very well with less sleep but eight hours is the requirement of the ordinary adult in order to keep body and mind functioning at their best.

To the perfectly healthy individual, sleep is simply to lie down, to close the eyes, and to lose consciousness. Unfortunately, few of us are so nearly normal that going to sleep is such a simple matter. We lie awake many minutes, sometimes many hours, before exhaustion finally brings sleep.

The inability to drop off to sleep at once may be due to any one of a number of things. Present-day life with its complexities, lack of exercise, lack of fresh air in the sleeping room, faulty diet, worry over business or personal affairs, tasks uncompleted, over-indulgence in tea or coffee, or any one of a dozen physical causes may be at the bottom of the trouble.

If we go about it conscientiously and with determination, it is comparatively easy to overcome most of these factors. We can correct the lack of exercise and fresh air. As to diet, the diet which agrees best with the individual is the one that makes him sleep best.

Digestive upsets are communicated to the brain and poor sleep and bad dreams are the result. If one has fallen into the habit of planning the next day's activities or of recounting the past day's achievements, failures, or unfinished duties after retiring, insomnia will be developed. With a little determination, it is easy to make the mind a complete blank and sleep will follow.

There are some simple preparations before retiring that will produce relaxation and induce sleep. For some persons, a warm bath is helpful. If one gets into bed immediately after without chilling the body. Don't, after you are undressed, walk about in your bare feet. The nerves and blood vessels in the soles of the feet are stimulated and it takes some time to overcome the sensation. If the circulation is poor or if you are much fatigued, drink a glass of hot milk or lemonade.

If the room is noisy, shut out the noise, even if you have to put on ear muffs. Shut out the light by putting a piece of black cloth over the eyes. Don't take drugs or medicines to make you sleep. Use common sense methods.

ALONG LIFE'S TRAIL

BUTTONS AND BADGES

MY FRIEND Gordon was wearing a parti-colored button in his lapel the meaning of which was unintelligible to me.

"Just joined the 'Boosters' club," he explained.

These badges of accomplishment are as numerous as flies around a can of maple sirup; they decorate all sorts and conditions of men; they reveal the most personal and intimate relations of life. We conceal nothing in these days of what we have done, of the organizations to which we belong, or of the activities in which we are engaged.

The conductor who received my fare as I rode home on the electric cars was wearing on the lapel of his coat a huge gold-plated atrocity announcing that he had secured membership in some secret industrial or fraternal order with whose insignia I was unfamiliar. The professor who occupied the seat with me announced by the button on the lapel of his coat that he had been in the Civil war and by the keys dangling from his watch chain that he had accomplished no little in a scientific way and that while in college he had maintained a scholastic average of 90 or above.

The traveling man facing me told his business by the organization badge on his coat, and the number of degrees he had taken in Masonry by his watch fob, his signet ring giving away another series of facts concerning his fraternal affiliations. It was as easy to pick out the college boys and girls as to tell a policeman by the star that he wears.

We take no stock these days in not letting our left hand know what our right hand is up to. Instead, we shout it out until every individual in the neighborhood knows fully our comings and goings, what we have been doing and where our money has gone. If we give a quarter to charity, we announce the fact with a button; if we join anything we publish our membership through the medium of a pin or a watch charm.

I have wondered sometimes if the widow spoken of in sacred writ who dropped her farthing into the contribution box at the temple asked for a button when she was leaving the building, or if the Good Samaritan ultimately dangled a Carnegie medal on his shirt front or from his watch chain. It is quite possible if it was the style in those days.

Sudan Grass Quite Valuable Hay Crop

Any farmer who wants an easy-to-grow, good-yielding hay crop that is relished by practically all forms of live stock will do well to plant at least a small acreage of Sudan grass and to become acquainted with its habits and its valuable quality, thinks C. P. Blackwell, agronomist at Clemson college.

Sudan grass, Professor Blackwell explains, is closely related to the cultivated sorghums and is a comparatively new forage crop in this country. It was introduced into the United States in 1909. In appearance it is taller, has broader leaves and is entirely without the underground stems which make Johnson grass such a bad weed on farm lands. It grows to a height of 3 to 5 feet if seeded broadcast, and taller than this if planted in cultivated rows. It is generally seeded broadcast when grown for hay production. It makes a large yield of hay, the yield varying with the fertility of the land and the fertilizer used, and ranging from one to eight tons of cured hay per acre. The quality of this hay is about the same as that of Johnson grass or Timothy. Practically all forms of live stock relish it and do well on it. It is easily cut and is not difficult to keep and handle.

When sown broadcast for hay, about 30 pounds of seed per acre should be used. When planted in rows, the rows may be anywhere from 20 to 40 inches apart and 6 to 10 pounds of seed per acre will be sufficient for planting. If planted early in the season, several cuttings may be secured in one year.

Secure Herd Bull When Demand Has Slackened

Most farmers who buy herd sires wait until they need one and then rush out and get the first one they can lay hands on. And in this case, following the crowd is the worst possible procedure. The successful breeder selects his herd sire when the demand is lightest, and gets a better bull at a lower price, says Professor H. A. Hooper of the state college of agriculture at Ithaca.

Forehanded men neither patch their roofs when it is raining nor buy herd bulls when everyone else is doing the same thing. If a man needs a sire next spring, right now is an excellent time to start looking for him, says Professor Hooper. The eternal law of supply and demand works as well in regard to bulls as it does with any other commodity, he says, and the time to catch bears is when they are out; not when everyone else is bear-hunting.

"So," says Professor Hooper, "if a herd of cattle is worth having, it's worth a little time and trouble spent in looking up its most important single unit, and the man who is wise gets his herd sire all lined up while the other fellow is putting it off till he isn't so busy."

Grow Supplemental Feed in Hogging Down Crops

When corn is to be hogged down it is always advisable to grow some supplemental food along with the corn. Soy beans and velvet beans are good crops for this purpose. In the case of corn and soy beans the hogs will balance their ration fairly well, but in the case of velvet beans, the hogs may eat the corn first and leave the beans alone to be grazed later. In this case some of the corn may be gathered and fed to the hogs later. If the hogs are given free access to a mineral mixture, feeding value will be added to these crops. It is possible to arrange forage crops so that hogs may be turned on the fields for a period of time and turned out later ready for the market without having been hand-fed a single day during the entire finishing period.

Farm Hints

Save toll and time by using your head.

It pays to fatten up your poultry for a week or ten days before shipping to market.

When buying seed don't let two or three cents difference in prices blind you into sacrificing quality for quantity.

The silo preserves the whole crop, stalks, leaves and grain, whether corn, kafir or sorghum, so that there is scarcely any loss.

A piece of carpet spread over the bins of potatoes will keep the light from the windows from striking them and turning them green.

In buying a pure-bred bull for grading up a herd, remember that the pedigree in itself is not a guarantee that a bull is what he should be. There are poor as well as good pedigreed animals.

The four essentials of a bumper crop are good seed, rich soil, scientific tillage, and favorable weather. All of these—even the latter—are more or less under the control of the farmer, for by filling his soil with humus, he can lessen the damage by too much or too little rain.

Snappy Town to Live In

By RALPH D. PAINE

(© by Doubleday, Page & Co.)

IT WAS the tragic fate of Johnny Beal, aged eighteen, to be a clerk in a small-town hardware store when he should have been pacing a spray-swept quarter-deck or riding the open spaces among red-blooded men. He said so himself, as often as anybody would listen. If customers edged away from his word pictures there was always the pretty cashier with the bobbed hair and the smile that beat any closeup ever flashed on a screen. Johnny told her this to her face. Instead of rebuking him as a fresh gink, Miss Edna made him dizzy with another of those million-dollar smiles.

"Not that I want to run wild or pull any freak stuff, Edna, for I'm too sensible for that. But I simply have gotta express myself somehow. I am terribly ambitious. That's what ails me. And ambition is bound to make a fellow restless. My gosh! Nothing ever happens in this soggy dump of a town, and nothing ever will."

"Adventure? Is that the big idea, Johnny?"

"You said it, Edna. More to it than that, though. It's up to me to make a stake somehow. What chance have I got here? You tell me."

Miss Edna ceased checking up a pile of monthly statements and gazed at the young adventurer with fond amusement. Then she powdered her pert nose and inquired:

"Why the stake? You can take me out and buy me one for supper, if you like. What's the hurry to get rich? You have a good job for a kid."

"So I can marry you, Edna. Haven't I told you that fifty times?"

"I am not a fortune hunter, Johnny, dear. You better hustle and earn a raise of salary. Heavens, but you are a handsome boy when you look at me like that. Now run away, or I'll do something rash."

"Listen! If I had a stake of five thousand dollars would you marry me?" persisted the impassioned suitor.

"No, for I'd drop dead in my tracks before you could be a widower. For the love of Mike, shoo! I am a poor working girl."

As a brutal anti-climax the boss bawled from an alcove: "Drat you, Johnny. What in time do I pay you for? You come get this sprayer and load it with bug poison. Then you trot around to Doctor Merritt's house with it and show him how to spray his pet-rat patch. He phoned that the mixture was no good and had the nerve to tell me his bugs got fat on it."

"The old dumb-bell don't know how to use a sprayer," said Johnny Beal. "I watched him puttin' in his back yard. All right, I'll show him how."

Expertly, Johnny measured a proper dose of the prepared poison and dumped it into the two-gallon galvanized spraying tank. Then it occurred to him to make it sure death and so avoid more trouble with the unpleasant Mr. Merritt. So he added, at random, some arsenate of lead, a dash of blue vitriol and a rich seasoning of paris green.

"That ought to put a crimp in 'em," said he, as he poured the sprayer two-thirds full of water and vigorously shook it. He slung it over his shoulder by the strap and moved briskly out of the store. As he walked along he plied the plunger to build up air pressure in the cylinder and get ready for action.

In front of the bank he paused to look at a shade tree whose leaves were badly eaten by caterpillars. The fuzzy pests were crawling along the twigs, so many of them that Johnny unlimbered the sprayer for a practice shot. He might as well make sure that the machine was ready for business.

The caterpillars appeared so disgusted that he gave them another volley. The breeze carried the fine spray against the side of a closed car standing at the curb. The courteous Johnny hastened to wipe off the white spots with his handkerchief. The man behind the wheel swore and told him to go chase himself. Johnny resented his rudeness and advised him to seek a torrid climate.

Just then a pistol shot was heard in the bank, then another. Out from the entrance, taking the stone steps in a leap, came a burly figure of a man, a small satchel in one hand, a pistol in the other. He charged straight for the closed car at the curb.

Johnny Beal stood petrified, his mouth open, too scared to budge from the path of the outlaw. The pistol was jerked up to fire and clear the way, but Johnny was quicker. He did not mean to be. One finger happened to be on the nozzle valve of the sprayer. That finger tightened convulsively. The nozzle was pointing straight ahead, with plenty of air pressure behind it.

The fleeing bank robber caught it full in the face—prepared poison, arsenate of lead, a dash of blue vitriol and a rich seasoning of paris green. Blinded, he swerved with his hands to his face and crashed into the maple tree. Falling to the pavement, he groaned that he was dying, just before Johnny Beal banged him over the head with the loaded sprayer.

"He fits the description of Three-Fingered Jake Dorsey," said the chief of police, after he had snapped the handcuffs on him, "though that mixture in the sprayer surely did muss his mug up. There's five thousand dollars reward out for Jake, dead or alive."

"Oh, boy!" blissfully murmured Johnny Beal. "Watch me beat it back to the store. Some snappy town to live in. I'll tell the world."

Sun Still a Mystery.

The sun is a hotter place than the old orthodox hereafter. Its temperature is about 6,600 degrees centigrade. In breadth Old Sol is 865,000 miles across. Compared with him, our earth is like a kernel of popcorn in the center of a dinner plate. But although Old Sol regulates our life, growth and health from a distance of 92,930,000 miles, to be exact, science as yet knows little about him, observes Capper's Weekly. People realize in their subconscious minds that the sun is closely related to the mystery of life, which is one reason they are forever talking about the weather that is regulated by the sun as completely as a furnace regulates the temperature of a house in winter. But the big day star is almost as much of a mystery to us as he was to the ancients.
